TERROR STRIKE: The BNP warned this would happen, and who would do it, a full year before disaster struck in London on July 7th 2005.

Suicide bombers in Britain

MORE than a year before the suicide bomb attacks in London on July 7th 2005, Nick Griffin, the chairman of the British National Party, warned it would happen AND said who would be responsible. At a meeting at Morley Town Hall in April 2004 he told the audience: "Suicide bombings will take place in this country, and it's going to be done by asylum seekers or second generation Pakistanis living in somewhere like Bradford. There is going to be blood on our streets." For predicting exactly what would happen - something no other British politician could do - Nick Griffin was arrested and charged with inciting racial hatred. Thankfully two British juries threw out the charges, finding the BNP leader 'NOT GUILTY' for telling the truth.

BNP IS PROVED RIGHT AGAIN!

This time on special treatment for asylum seekers

BACK IN 2003 the British National Party exposed how the Labour Government was dispersing the 103,080 asylum seekers that arrived in Britain in 2002 with the help of a secret deal with private landlords.

The Home Office's Joint Tenancy Agreement provided funds for private landlords to fully equip their properties with every modern appliance available so long as the property was rented out to asylum seekers. That meant that asylum seekers were coming to Britain and being housed at the taxpayers' expense and living in far superior and better serviced accommodation than many Britons.

It was a scandal and the BNP went to every newspaper asking them to expose it... but none of them had the courage to do so. Now, over four years down the line and with £billions of taxpayers' money wasted, the News of the World has finally woken up to what is going on.

Last month, in a report it labelled 'an exclusive' the newspaper revealed that in Rochdale in Lancashire £1.5 MILLION a year is being spent furnishing plush flats for asylum seekers.

"More than £3,000 a year is spent kitting out each of about 500 flats for newly arrived immigrants, despite severe poverty in the area. "Taxpayers' cash is spent on swanky beds, carpets, fridge-freezers, cookers, microwaves and even ash trays," it reported.

This Home Office contract to furnish the flats only came to light after workers at the Lanebottom Industrial Equitable Pioneers Society, who secured the lucrative contract, blew the whistle on what was going on.

"We'd furnish about 500 flats a year at least. A minimum of £3,000 was spent on each and it was all good quality stuff," one told the News of the World.

The special treatment of asylum seekers was something the British National Party alerted the public to in 2003. But only now are the media reluctantly acknowledging that the BNP was right all along.

... and on the 'grooming' of young White girls

LAST MONTH the media reported on - "the hidden world in which Muslim men 'groom' young white girls for sex" - after Zulfar Hussain, 46, and Qaiser Naveed, 32, had been jailed for child abuse offences.

Both men pleaded guilty at Preston Crown Court to abduction, sexual activity with a child and the supply of a controlled drug. The Times reported:

"The trial came amid growing concern at the attitudes of some Asian (Muslim - Ed) men towards white girls which campaigners for women claim few people wish to address.

Parents have complained that in parts of the country with large Asian communities white girls as young as 12 are being targeted for sex by older Asian men yet the authorities are unwilling to act because of fears of being labelled racist."

In 2005 the British National Party WAS talking about this issue. It even had an election broadcast just on the grooming of young White girls which was heavily censored by the television authorities before they would agree to transmit it.

BNP musicians also recorded a song, "the White Roses of Keighley" to draw the public's attention to what was going on. But it all fell on deaf ears and the BNP was just accused of being racist. That is until now when once again the British National Party has been proved right.

South West tour gives BNP General Election boost

NICK Griffin's tour of the South West of England in August gave the Party a timely boost in what might be the run-up to an October General Election.

"The meetings were three times the size of those on my last visit over a year ago and the political calibre of those attending offers real hope for the future, indicating that the BNP is on the verge of a major breakthrough in this region," Nick told Freedom.

An early General Election was on everyone's mind so the adoption of candidates and fund-raising dominated discussions. Nick was accompanied by professional photographer Glenn Chappelle-Marriott and anyone wanting photos of the SW tour or the RWB should contact him via his website at www.soulsapes.co.uk.

Welfare state attracting influx from Africa and Asia - Winston Churchill

WINSTON Churchill expressed alarm about the influx of immigrants from Asia and Africa as early as 1950 and considered imposing a limit on numbers, secret Cabinet papers revealed last month.

The Prime Minister was worried that allowing too many immigrants to settle was storing up problems for the future, but no action was taken because he was worried about losing the 'liberal' vote.

The papers, released by the National Archives, show that the large number of immigrants from the West Indies, India and Pakistan coming to Britain to find work was causing concerns. A figure of 40,000 immigrants living in Britain in 1954 is given, compared with just 7,000 before the Second World War.

The handwritten notes were kept by Cabinet Secretary Sir Norman Brook, and provided a record of Cabinet meetings separate from the official minutes. These left little doubt as to Ministers' thinking on why immigrants were flooding into Britain.

On February 3, 1954, under the Cabinet agenda item 'Coloured Workers', Churchill is quoted as saying: "They are attracted by our Welfare State."

Today there are 6,500,000 people living in Britain who were born overseas.

CHURCHILL: In 1954 he believed that immigration from Africa and Asia was storing up problems for the future.

A victim of racism that the police and media couldn't care less about!

JUST before 4.00pm on Friday 6th of July, 52 year-old Keith Brown returned home after picking his children up from school. Just after 4.00pm he was lying dead on the front lawn of his garden in Normacot, Stoke-on-Trent.

The police, the Stoke Sentinel newspaper and the local TV and radio reported that Keith had died as the result of 'a dispute between neighbours', dismissing in a few words the life of a British family man killed by an immigrant. Can you imagine the media frenzy if the roles of the victim and murderer had been reversed?

If the police and media had been truthful they wouldn't have talked about a 'dispute between neighbours'. It was no such thing. Keith Brown was being victimised by his Muslim neighbours.

First they moved the fence that divided the two properties and took 2ft from Keith's garden. He complained to the Council who condemned the 'land grab' but did nothing about it.

Then they accused him of 'racism' and Keith was arrested by zealous police officers only for charges to be dropped when a West Indian neighbour spoke up on his behalf.

Last year the brake pipes of Keith's van were cut and he narrowly avoided a serious accident. Not long after this his English bull terrier was poisoned and his Alsatian puppy disappeared. Time and again Keith and his family had requested to move from the area to another council house, but despite being on the housing list for years their requests were ignored.

In desperation Keith fitted a CCTV system to his house in order to obtain video evidence of the continued racially-motivated abuse and assaults directed towards him and his family. One such assault was indeed captured on video and taken to the police but they refused to act upon it.

KEITH BROWN: The BNP's 6 Stoke councillors were pallbearers at the funeral and over 100 BNP members, including Party chairman Nick Griffin, were in attendance.

The months of anguish continued with relentless abuse, assaults and smashed windows until the inevitable happened. Witnesses saw Keith being confronted by a group of Muslim men outside his house. Whilst they were remonstrating with him another Muslim man crept from behind a car and plunged a knife into his back in front of his three young children.

One of the reasons the police failed to protect Keith Brown was because he was a British National Party activist and his tormentors were from that fated ethnic minority which is treated with kid gloves by all the authorities.

■Habib Khan has been charged with the murder but the four other men arrested for the attack were released on police bail pending further inquiries.

Emotional tributes to Keith Brown at the RWB

THERE were mixed emotions on the final afternoon of the Red, White & Blue Family Festival in Derbyshire in August.

Giving his traditional closing address for the weekend, British National Party chairman Nick Griffin (above) fought to retain his composure as he spoke of the tragic death of BNP activist Keith Brown, murdered by a gang of Muslims that had been terrorising his family for months. A collection was taken for Keith Brown's family which raised £1,500 (above). But there was also a message of hope from the BNP leader. He outlined how at last the British people were taking a serious look at the BNP as an alternative to the three main parties, and the responsibility we all had as members to meet the new challenge laid at our door.

"Nobody attending the funeral will ever forget the sight and sound of Keith's young children crying out for their murdered father.

This is life on the frontline of multi-racial Britain and Keith will not be the last to be taken from us in such circumstances.

Those corrupt politicians and their politically-correct media lackeys who make their living selling us the multi-cultural way of life should hang their heads in shame."

Righteous anger & political action

THE British National Party believes in telling the truth - even if it's sometimes uncomfortable to hear or even offensive to those who would rather bury their heads in the sand than face up to the problems in our society.

But while we often pass critical comment on the impact of mass immigration, multi-culturalism and even foreign religions on the indigenous people of our lands, we have no animosity towards immigrants, their descendants or the followers of non-native religions.

Nor do we intend to encourage others to feel such animosity, or believe that anything we have to say is likely to 'stir up hatred' against anyone. In fact, we believe that by providing a peaceful and constitutional outlet for the anger and frustration felt by millions of our people over the undemocratic transformation of our country by our political masters, the British National Party actually defuses tensions.

Where there is 'hate' we seek to turn it into righteous anger and political action against the only people who deserve to be hated - the politicians who use our taxes to turn our country into a place where we often feel like strangers in our own land.

150,000 BNP leaflets a month are taking our message to the public

At this year's RWB four new National leaflets calling for British jobs for British workers, a celebration of St. George's Day and an English Parliament, British people to be put first in housing and the protection of our countryside were unveiled.

The six original national leaflets, which cover Islam, Immigration, Crime, Europe, Tax and the NHS were introduced at the RWB last year and they sold out within two days. A re-print the following week also sold out within a month and over the following year a second reprint sold at a rate of nearly 150,000 a month! Available at an affordable £10 per thousand and printed professionally, they are a great way for branches and groups who don't produce their own literature to get the BNP message across to the public.

The leaflets all carry an information slip so anyone interested can easily contact the Party, and if they do they receive a 20-page glossy 'Britain First' booklet which acts as a great introduction to the British National Party and what it stands for. The leaflets now also allow the public to donate straight to the Party via the credit card hotline, so not only have these leaflets sold well and spread the message to almost 2 million homes, they have also brought in much needed funds from new sources.

Head of Publicity Mark Collett, who is responsible for the Party's magazine Identity as well as the national leaflets, explained the thinking behind them: "These leaflets have been a great addition to the Party's range of publicity material. Over the last 12 months, 2 million of them have been printed and distributed. They serve as a great tool for local organisers who want to warm up key wards before they put out their glossy election addresses.

"We looked long and hard at the issues that were coming up time and again in our target areas, and more often than not we found that immigrants taking jobs and housing topped the list of concerns of local people," Mark told Freedom.

"We also want to make sure that the BNP stand firm behind English nationalists and establish ourselves as the only real party for the patriotic English majority who are sick of being ignored."

WHITWICK WOODSTOCK: North West Leicestershire District Councillor Ian Meller, opens the annual charity fundraising event which featured seven local bands and a host of other entertainment.

BNP saves the day after Tories too busy to open charity event

ON Saturday 18th August, Whitwick prepared for another Woodstock, a local musical festival which raises thousands of pounds for local charities.

Seven local bands were lined up to play and several marquees put up to prevent the rain from spoiling the day. British National Party councillor for Whitwick Ian Meller, had the privilege of opening the event this year, after he stepped in to save the day when the organisers were let down by the chairman of the District Council.

The Conservative councillor was unable to make this important event because and his Deputy, another Tory councillor, said he was available but would arrive three hours after it had started.

Thankfully BNP councillors are only too happy to change their plans and attend such important fund-raising charity events - after all they are elected by the people to serve the community. "It was a very enjoyable event and went very well," said Ian Meller.

"I would like to congratulate all those that were involved in organising the event and I'm delighted that they have managed to raise so much money for our local charities."

famous Longbridge Rover plant was demolished leaving a huge void within the local community.

BNP organise Austin village celebrations

BRITISH National Party activists from South Birmingham took a key role in organising the anniversary of the founding of Austin village.

Les Orton, who is on the Austin village committee, called in Mike Bell and his team to organise the celebrations. The village was especially built to house workers for the Austin car plant which over the years took on many additional roles including producing Hurricanes and armoured vehicles during the Second World War. The celebrations were especially meaningful as just last month the General Election song will be big vote winner!

Where's it all gone now?

Ali's shops now on the corner,
And there's Mosques all over town.
24 hour a day kebab-house,
Foreign taxis run by Crown.
This little piece of England,
Green and often pleasant land,
Why the hell am I complaining,
And why don't I understand.

Chorus

And I say . . .
Where is the chapel,
Where my Grandma used to pray?
Where is the alehouse,
Where my father drank each day?
Where is the butcher's shop,
Our mam would buy her pork?
Where have all the White folks gone,
That used to stop and talk?

The bookies halfway down our street,
Has long since gone as well.
And Dr Watson's been replaced,
By a man they call Hatel.
It's curried rice and foreign dips,
No British fish and chips.
And the languages that we hear all day,
Comes from foreign lips.

Chorus

The bowling green and veterans' club,
Are now a ghostly past.
It's mainly used for cricket now,
Multiculture batting last.
As the school you pass, you'll see a mass of kids,
And not one's White.
Ethnicity, diversity,
Surely this just can't be right.

COLIN AUTY: His poignant song will prove a powerful vote winner amongst the older generation.

THE BRITISH National Party's General Election song is Colin Auty's 'Where's it all gone now?' - a lament about the changing face of Britain.

It is taken from the new CD Truth Hurts released just last month by Great White Records, and was written by Colin specifically about Savile Town, part of Dewsbury that has changed beyond recognition over the past 15 years.

But Where's it all gone now? could be about any town in Britain today and the words of the song will appeal especially to older voters who will be able to relate to the sentiments.

Martin Wingfield, editor of Freedom, believes that given the right exposure, the song will be a big vote winner.

"It's a powerful mix of words and music that could prove a potent force for winning support when the General Election comes along.

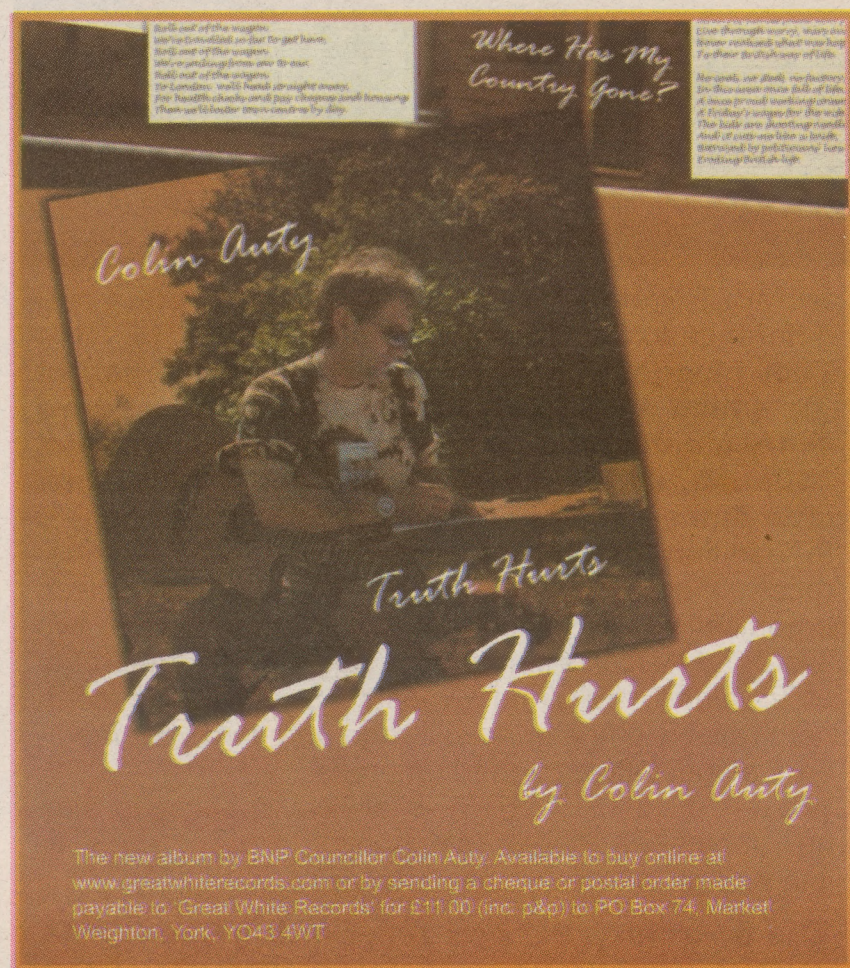

"If our campaigners can get this song out into their communities it will help wrest away older voters from their blind allegiance to Labour. The terminology of the song will mean more to them than others and once it gets played in their clubs and meeting places, news of it will spread."

But he stressed that it's the words that are key and that the printed lyrics must accompany the song when and where ever it is played.

"At your monthly meetings have the words printed out on a piece of paper and put a copy on every seat in the hall. Then when Where's it all gone now? is played people can read and listen to the words at the same time which helps emphasise what is being sung," he said.

And that must be the role of BNP organisers, to give the song and words the maximum exposure. Play the CD at your paper sales and promote the Truth Hurts album as much as possible. Martin believes the song could be used in one of the BNP's election broadcasts, especially if the BBC is being difficult about the BNP message in a more traditional format.

"Let Colin just sing his song, show images of derelict chapels, pubs, bookies and bowling greens and have the words scrolled underneath. It's a simple but powerful message that would hit home hard and be taken on board by many senior citizens who in the past would never have considered supporting the British National Party."

The new album by BNP Councillor Colin Auty. Available to buy online at www.greatwhiterecords.com or by sending a cheque or postal order made payable to 'Great White Records' for £11.00 (incl. p&g) to PO Box 74, Market Weighton, York, YO43 4WT

'White' haven police seize golly from taxi

POLICE in Whitehaven in West Cumbria have seized a gollywog that was hanging from the rear view mirror of one of the town's taxi cabs. A spokesman for the local constabulary admitted that a raid had taken place and a four inch doll taken into custody. Papers have been sent to the Crown Prosecution Service for them to investigate whether a racially aggravated public order offence has been committed.

Now, Copeland Council has warned cabbie John McAllister, that he could lose his licence if the CPS decide to prosecute him for displaying the golly.

HATE CRIME! - Police quiz Labour candidate

A Labour candidate at the local elections has been interviewed by police over a hate crime.

Jonathan Wood, who stood for Allerdale Council in May, was promoted in the local newspapers and on television as a rising star of the Labour Party because of his campaigning against the British National Party in Cumbria.

But the media's darling came unstuck when he encouraged visitors to his website 'to give a BNP member a smack'. Police were alerted to this incitement to violence by Allerdale BNP organiser Paul Stafford.

"Some of our leafleters are senior citizens who go out on their own delivering leaflets and I was worried about their safety", he said.

"I went to my local police station and drew their attention to Wood's website. They said they would be taking the matter very seriously because it came under their 'hate crime' criteria."

DECEPTIVE: Oldham's landscape might indicate a traditional English town, but the make-up of its population is becoming increasingly less and less traditional.

Flawed survey raises fears over the ethnic cleansing of Oldham

THE English population of Oldham is in decline and being replaced by immigrants from Pakistan and Bangladesh.

The ethnic cleansing of the Lancashire town is not in question, with Oldham Borough Council acknowledging that it is taking place in its population survey undertaken in 2005.

But now, because of the record levels of immigration since that survey was conducted and increasing Pakistani and Bangladeshi birth rates, the report's projections are out of date.

The 2001 census recorded that there were 109,500 traditional English, Scottish, Welsh, Irish and Ulster folk under the age of 45 living in Oldham, while there were 21,000 of Pakistani and Bangladeshi origin.

The Oldham Population Project 2005 carried out by Manchester University predicted that by 2011, the traditional population in this age group would have dropped by 16,400, while the South Asian population would have risen by nearly 10,000.

This trend was predicted to be maintained in the following ten years with the British under 45s dwindling to 82,600 in 2021 and the Pakistani and Bangladeshi under 45 population rising to 38,100. The survey was blunt in its conclusions:

"Greater ethnic diversity is expected in Oldham's population. In 2001 White people made up 86% of the population but by 2021 this will be reduced to 75%.

"The number of people of Pakistani heritage is forecast to increase from 6.4% to 10.9% and the Bangladeshi heritage population from 4.5% to 10.3%. Increased numbers of people in these two communities will largely result from an excess of births over deaths, rather than migration."

However, because of the increased immigration in recent years this nightmare scenario is set to become even more frightening, and there are questions being asked over the accuracy of the initial survey.

A researcher at Manchester University contacted Freedom with her findings:

GLODWICK: In this part of Oldham the visual impact of immigration is already clear for everyone to see.

"The 2005 survey was in fact a response from the council to the growth of the BNP in the town. They wanted to say, 'yes, there's a change taking place, but it's not as rapid as the BNP is making out'."

"The criteria for immigration and birthrates were based on the ten years prior to 2001, if it had been on the three years after 2001 the results would have been very different. I think this was a deliberate ploy to keep projections low."

The researcher said that the record levels of immigration in recent years would have an enormous effect on the demographics of Oldham. She also said that increased birth rates amongst South Asians would also change the projections, as would the 'White Flight' from the town which would take hold as the visual impact of the growth of the non-British population became apparent.

So what will Oldham be like in 2021? Our researcher has no doubts.

"Unless there is a change in the political will of the Government of this country, White people in Oldham will be in a minority by 2021."

1-in-5 pupils is now from an ethnic minority

THE latest Government figures on the make-up of UK schools give a stark warning as to the dramatic effect that immigration is having on our population.

Now one in five schoolchildren in Britain is from an ethnic minority - a figure that has doubled since Labour came to power in 1997 and equally worrying is that one in eight pupils don't speak English at home.

The number of primary schools that don't have pupils from an ethnic minority are almost non-existent with 95% schools now having a 'diverse' intake. 360 schools have actually tipped over the balance - they now have more Black and Asian pupils than they do White children.

Schools warned 'integrate or face closure'

SCHOOLS with mainly White pupils could be labelled 'failing' if they don't encourage children to mix with other races.

That's the Labour Government's latest mad-cap scheme to force the indigenous population to accept more immigrants. Outlining the guidelines, Minister Jim Knight said it was unhealthy that some White teenagers had never met a Muslim and this needed to be addressed.

Proposals include schools in rural or suburban areas twinning with multi-ethnic schools and staging joint plays and sporting events. Also parents from different backgrounds would be brought together by holding coffee mornings, and regular parents evenings.

Schools that fail to meet the new requirements will have their governing bodies taken over by council hit squads or even face being closed.

Council told to prepare for Asian-only Batley

MEMBERS of Batley's Asian community have told Kirklees education officers to start planning for an Asian-only future for the town.

At a meeting at the Al-Hikmah Centre in Track Road, Warwick Firman, head of planning and admissions and Margaret Parker, director of Building Schools for the Future, heard from community leaders and received a petition objecting to mixed-sex schools in Batley.

Akoji Badat said that 540 people from his community had signed a petition objecting to Batley's schools becoming mixed-sex.

Another community spokesman told the council officers:

"We need to look at the population in 10 to 15 years' time. The Asian population will be growing and we might see that most of North Kirklees is predominantly Asian, so it's important that the views of the Asian community be listened to now."

Akoji Badat agreed, saying that 'White flight' from the area was changing the make-up of the town's population each year.

"More of the White community are moving out every year leaving the future of Batley in the hands of the Asian community," he said.

BATLEY'S FUTURE: Saluting the change.

A Councillor's Notebook

Richard Barnbrook, BNP Group Leader Barking & Dagenham Council

THE British National Party's star in Barking and Dagenham is still shining brightly well over a year after 12 BNP councillors were elected on that momentous evening in May 2006.

Despite a concerted campaign of disruption by the Labour-run council, London Mayor Ken Livingstone and the Labour Government, the BNP Group is still working hard representing the community and doing what it was elected to do, which is to put housing at the top of the local political agenda.

Our determined stance on this all-important issue has forced Barking MP Margaret Hodge into a U-turn on the allocation of council housing to local people, and Dagenham MP John Cruddas to echo BNP calls for more money to be spent on the building of new council houses.

It was the BNP that started the debate by asking why thirty years has passed since a council house had been built in the borough, and it was the BNP that put forward the council motion that local people should be housed before immigrants and asylum seekers.

The BNP has made housing THE issue in Barking and Dagenham and exposed the Government as having lied about only 1% of migrants getting council housing, when in fact the real figure is FIVE TIMES that number.

Along with my colleagues, I have put forward 26 motions and asked over 50 questions to full council meetings.

The motions have dealt with equal opportunities for the indigenous population, flying the Union flag on civic buildings, parking and transport, fencing and security, a new general hospital, environmental issues and youth development.

RICHARD BARNBROOK: Our stance on housing has forced Margaret Hodge into a U-turn and John Cruddas to echo BNP sentiments.

The questions we have put forward have covered every aspect of social and community life, including play areas, security and CCTV cameras, opportunities for local people, regeneration and the environment, TB and medical health.

At the time it appeared that our proposals were rejected by the Labour Council, but in fact it has to date implemented nearly a third of our suggested policies. Most recently, it accepted financial responsibility for fencing around council housing, implemented new measures for safer and cleaner public parks and put more police on the streets - all proposed by the British National Party.

Our councillors are now well known for working hard within their communities. Their activities range from helping with housing issues, advising on parking and traffic petitions, removing graffiti, communicating with the police on fly tipping and anti-social behaviour hot spots, and protecting local allotments.

Looking to the future, the BNP Group is pushing ahead on a number of issues. We want a referendum on the building of a recreation facility for youngsters that will provide a youth cafe, land for outdoor pursuits and a hands-on workshop. The centre will give strong guidance to the youth of the borough and will be walled off over acres of land to protect the community from any noise.

We also want a referendum on the reintroduction of the council housing points system and the scrapping of the bidding system, which doesn't benefit local people. Our campaign for the building of a general hospital on the site of the run down Upney Hospital and for the introduction of Sarah's Law will continue apace.

SETTING THE AGENDA: One of the BBC's political commentators interviews Richard Barnbrook on the social housing crisis in Barking & Dagenham.

GENERAL ELECTION

The British National Party made further progress along the road to gaining more political influence within our country with a very good set of local election results on May 3rd 2007. Now it is vital that we build on these gains. With an early General Election on the cards and next May the all-important London Assembly and London Mayor elections, funds are desperately needed to help finance this 'push for power'. Please help us all you can.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union to restore Britain's freedom. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need, an end to field trials of GM crops and restoring our 200 mile fishing limit.

FAIR PLAY FOR ENGLAND: The setting up of an English Parliament to give England the same right of self-determination within the UK as enjoyed by Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

1-in-6 Eastern Europeans claim benefit

CLAIMS for benefits made by immigrants from Eastern Europe have trebled in the past year with 112,000 migrants now claiming hand-outs of over £125 million.

The latest Home Office figures show that one in six of an estimated 683,000 Eastern European immigrants is living off the state. A year ago, only 42,620 were claiming benefits.

Now Highlands threatened by Poles' carbon footprint

MORE than 8,000 Poles living in Inverness in the Scottish Highlands are demanding a direct air link between the Highland capital and Poland.

So Highlands and Islands Enterprise (HIE) are exploring the potential for flights between Inverness airport and Eastern Europe.

HIE claims that the Highlands need to develop links with Eastern European countries to cement global connections and boost population growth.

Zosia Wierbowicz-Fraser, the chairwoman of the Inverness Polish Association, said:

"Poles have to go from Glasgow just now and have to stay overnight. There is considerable time, expense and stress involved in what should be a quick and easy journey."

Italians take jobs home

ITALIAN owners have pulled the plug on their cooker factory in Blythe Bridge in Staffordshire, with the loss of more than six hundred jobs.

Indesit has announced that production at the former Creda plant will be transferred to the company's factories back in Italy.

WE'VE PASSED!: But many universities and employers regard the increasingly devalued A level as worthless.

A level 'success' reveals an educational failure

YET AGAIN, A-Level exam results, just like the figures for steel production in Communist North Korea, went up this year. 96.9% passed, up 0.3% on last year, which was up 0.4% on 2005 and so on. 25.3% entrants got top A grades, up 1.2% on 2006, which in turn was up 1.3% on 2005.

The Government hailed these figures as another milestone in the onward march of New Labour, bringing the glorious day nearer when 100% (or 101.3% for a North Korean election turnout) of entrants get a grade A - all have won and all must have prizes.

But such prizes have no value. Universities and employers, with limited places and jobs to offer, identify the best applicants and simply discard the devalued A-Level as worthless.

New Labour seeks to portray this relentless upward trend in A-Level passes as the result of better teaching. To some extent this is true as better teaching makes for easier exams and hence inflated grades. But it highlights a statistic arguably more significant than those the Government trumpets. The Joint Council for Qualifications has revealed that, whilst comprehensive schools have seen a 3% increase in the percentage of their students getting A's since 2000, in the much reviled selective sector, our grammar and independent schools, the increase has been double that.

Meanwhile this year, as in every year since the 1970s when Labour

"A vision where all British children, regardless of their aptitude and ability, are educated and trained to play equally valuable roles in the life of our nation" imposed a comprehensive education on everyone, Northern Ireland, which kept grammar schools and selection, once again turned in the best exams results in the UK. This year in Ulster, 98% passed and a third got A's, compared to a quarter on the mainland.

Instead of preening themselves on 'record figures' while teenagers wonder why their shiny new grade A's at A level don't open the doors they used to, our educators should be looking at the fundamental failure of our education system to equip our children and our nation with the skills it needs.

The British National Party would base its education policy on an alternative approach grounded in the original 1944 Education Act, where grammar schools and equally vital technical schools have the key role in our youngsters' education.

It is a vision where all British children, regardless of their aptitude and ability, are educated and trained to play equally valuable roles in the life of our nation.

Majority of Polish migrants plan to stay

THE majority of Polish migrants plan to stay permanently according to a survey carried out at British ports and stations.

The finding undermines Government claims that many Eastern Europeans in the UK are short-term visitors with no intention of remaining.

The survey, carried out by Warsaw-based researchers, indicated that more than 300,000 Poles wanted to stay - a sharp contrast to the 13,000 migrants predicted by the Home Office.

Researchers also found that over 40% of the Poles who recently moved to Britain for work have already brought one or more members of their families to live with them in their new homes.

1-in-5 crimes in London committed by a foreigner

MORE than one in five crimes committed in London in the first six months of this year were carried out by a foreign citizen.

During this period there were 22,793 crimes in the capital for which a foreign national was charged and more than a quarter of these were violent offences, ranging from murder to assault.

The highest number of offences were carried out by Poles, with Jamaicans, Somalians and Romanians amongst the other worst offenders.

Poles tell police: 'Interpretors not prompt cards'

POLICE in Consett in County Durham have been given Polish language prompt cards to help them to communicate with the town's rapidly growing Polish community.

There are nearly 1,000 Poles currently in the town and the cards will show phrases such as "are you injured?" or "turn your music down!" Officers will not make any attempt to speak the Polish phrases but will just hold up the cards.

The police were hoping that the move would cut the cost of employing interpreters every time a Pole is arrested, but community leaders say that the cards won't solve the communication problem and translators will still be needed.

Anyone suggested that the Poles try learning English?"

THE BRITISH WORKERS' UNION

Not much left of the once proud 'Workshop of the World' The foreign takeover of British industry marches on ...

ANOTHER leading British company is in danger of falling into foreign hands after Dutch chemical group Akzo Nobel set its sights on taking over ICI.

Founded in 1926 as Imperial Chemical Industries, ICI has been the standard-bearer of British industry, best known for its Dulux paint brand. But with Akzo Nobel offering 670p a share, up from their original offer of 600p a month earlier, it is feared its days as a British company are numbered.

Opposing the deal are the trustees of ICI's pension fund who are fearful that foreign owners may be unable to meet ICI's £9.2 billion in pension liabilities to current and past ICI employees.

If ICI does fall into foreign hands, it will join a growing list of other once-proud firms lost to the country. Last year Dubai bought shipping giant P&O and a Spanish-led multinational consortium now runs most of our major airports following its takeover of the privatised British Airports Authority. This year builders Hanson was snapped up by Germany's Heidelberg Cement. Today there isn't much left of the British economy beyond unproductive 'financial and business services' because most of the rump of the once proud 'workshop of the world' has been sold-off to foreigners.

This "selling off the family silver" as former Tory Prime Minister Harold Macmillan so succinctly described it, has been encouraged by short-sighted Tory and Labour Governments. It's a folly for which the British people will have to pay dearly in the future.

2 out of 3 new jobs go to migrants

TWO-thirds of jobs created under New Labour have been taken by immigrants, Government figures have revealed.

More than one and a half million foreigners have entered the UK in the last ten years to work, and this number could be even higher as the figures do not cover those in 'short-term' housing estimated at another quarter of a million people. The number of people in full-time work has risen by two and a half million since Labour came to power in 1997 but with 61% of these are newly-arrived migrant workers.

£20,000 to encourage migrants to cash in on services

CUMBRIA County Council has produced 5,000 copies of a 232-page book to help migrant workers access essential services.

The council is one of the first local authorities to produce such a 'welcome' for people from Poland, Lithuania and the Czech Republic coming to Britain to look for work.

232-page book for migrant workers.

The book, which cost £21,750 of taxpayers' money to produce, is the first of a series planned. Joel Rasbash, the county council's equality officer, said similar versions in Russian, Portuguese and Cantonese were also planned.

Mike Ashburner from Barrow BNP used the Freedom of Information Act to find out how much the book cost.

"Local people will be very disappointed that their money is being used in this manner," he said.

"Migrant workers are coming to Cumbria, taking our jobs and looting the local economy by sending the money they earn back to Eastern Europe.

"The same council is closing local schools because they say they can't afford to pay teachers yet they have money to squander on a book encouraging migrants to put further pressure on our already overstretched local services."

Now globalisation is forcing up the price of our milk

by Steve Johnson

THE price of milk, cheese and dairy produce in our shops is set to rise in the coming months to the highest average dairy prices in living memory.

Since February, the price of skimmed milk powder, which is used to make most milk-containing products like chocolate, has shot up by 60% - the biggest and fastest price hike ever.

The cause of this rise in dairy prices, much like everything else that is wrong in our country today, is down to globalisation and the 'free market' economy which is being fuelled by growing demand from China and the monopoly buying power of the giant supermarket chains which control the products that we buy.

The supply of milk from British dairy farms has been hit hard because the European Union has stopped subsidising our farmers. This comes against a backdrop of supermarkets cutting the prices they pay farmers for their produce.

According to the Royal Association of British Dairy Farmers, last year milk prices paid to farmers averaged 18 pence a litre even though it costs the farmer on average 20.5p to produce a litre of milk. The result of this has been to drive farmers into ruin.

"In a BNP Britain, foreign countries wouldn't be allowed to dump their cheap labour manufactured goods on us or bid up the price of the produce we need."

DAIRY FARMS: Facing ruin because of the supermarket milk monopoly.

DEMAND: China's increasing population is putting pressure on food supplies.

In 1995, there were 28,000 dairy farmers. By 2006 more than half of them had been driven out of business and according to the Milk Development Council many of those remaining face ruin.

Those farmers struggling to keep going have been further hit by a drastic rise in the price of cattle feed. Corn has gone up 60% in the last year and again because of globalisation. This time it's British farmers trying to buy corn produce facing competition from Americans who want to run their cars on fuel made from the same corn.

Our appalling summer this year hasn't helped matters because with pastures under water, cattle have had to be kept indoors and fed expensive feed and silage rather than being turned out to graze. This reduces yield per cow from around 20 litres to just 17. No doubt the supermarkets will use this as the excuse to push up milk prices, but of course it's not the recent rains which are the reason for the fall in the supply of British milk - it's the supermarkets' monopoly itself which has put farmers out of business.

China, on the other hand, has done sufficiently well out of dumping their cheap industrial produce on the West via the global market to be able to afford to buy up our milk. President Wen Jiabao recently announced a plan to provide the entire 1200 million Chinese population with half a litre of milk a day. As a result, Chinese milk consumption is expected to rise by 15% a year for each of the next three years which will put more pressure on supplies and result in further price rises.

In an economically self-sufficient Britain, our farmers would be able to sell their produce through an abundance of outlets such as shops and markets. Foreign countries would neither be able to dump their sweatshop labour manufactured goods on us nor bid up the price of the produce we need. Supply and demand for milk, like many other goods, would balance each other out in a genuine free, fair and competitive market, without any interference from the European Union.

In the economy run by a BNP Government, British consumers would be paying our farmers a fair price for their produce instead of funding the vast profits of giant supermarket combines and bidding against foreign countries for the food we need to feed our families.

10 million Britons are out of work

ONE in four of the adult population in Britain doesn't have a job and the real jobless total is SIX TIMES higher than what the Government claims it is.

The official figures announced last month show unemployment at 1.65 million but it hides the fact that nearly 8 million are out of work and on benefits.

Those not in a full time job include 2.35 million carers - family members looking after an elderly relative - two million long-term sick, 200,000 temporarily sick, mothers bringing up children and 2 million students who can't find work.

UNDERMINING: 500 migrant workers a day are arriving to earn three times what they can in Eastern Europe.

It's a home grown workforce that is being ignored by the Government which is more interested in encouraging 500 economic migrant workers a day to come to Britain.

A BNP economics spokesman said the figures were a scandal.

"Foreign workers are undermining the local workforce and the local community. They can work for below the minimum wage because the money they earn is still more than three times the comparable wage in Eastern Europe.

"They then send their wages back home which denies local economies a vital income. The only people who benefit from migrant workers are bosses, private landlords and employment agencies. "We need to provide training and incentives to get our own people back to work."

BP sells-off its last UK refinery

CORYTON REFINERY: The 370 acre site alongside the Thames is 3 miles from Stanford-le-Hope.

BRITISH Petroleum (BP) has sold its last remaining UK oil refinery to Swiss-based Petroplus for £712 million.

The sell-off of the Coryton refinery in Essex comes after the company disposed of its Grangemouth refinery in 2005. So now BP, which is Britain's largest industrial company, has virtually ended its operations in its country of origin.

The Coryton Refinery was built in 1953, employs 540 staff and provides subsidiary work for many local firms. It supplies aircraft fuel to Heathrow and Gatwick airports via pipelines and serves the south east of England.

The refinery site has been an industrial site since 1895 when an explosives factory was built here together with a village to house the factory workers. The name Coryton derives from the Cory brothers who bought the site in 1923. Later, the site was used as an oil storage depot before the refinery was constructed by Mobil. Since 1996 the refinery has been operated by BP and two major expansions and many minor improvements have increased the refinery capacity to ten times the original volume.

"This fortress built by Nature for herself Against infection and the hand of war"

by Steve Johnson

SO it appears that, by the skin of our teeth, we have avoided another disastrous Foot and Mouth (FMD) epidemic - for now.

No thanks to the stupidity of successive Governments in locating laboratories harbouring dangerous germs in the middle of the Home Counties instead of on an isolated offshore island.

There are other such laboratories harbouring deadly diseases of humans as well as animals dotted about the same area. The HPA Centre for Infections in Colindale, North London, for example houses vials of lassa fever, polio, SARS, encephalitis and other lethal pestilence. Porton Down, near Salisbury, has bioweapon plagues such as Marburg and Ebola viruses and anthrax.

These potentially lethal germs should be put on remote islands, of which Britain has plenty, under secure military and naval guard. Given that there are suspicions that the Pirbright FMD outbreak may have been a deliberate act of sabotage, stricter controls on those working with deadly germs are also needed.

FOOT & MOUTH: Globalisation puts Britain at threat from the Third World.

Maybe the Government, which is so keen on banning BNP members from working in the police or prisons, should on far more valid security grounds, now ban Muslims from working in deadly germ labs?

Self-evident as such measures would seem to everyone except the people who have been ruling our country for the last fifty years, a senior scientist warns they will not be enough.

Sir Brian Follett, Chairman of the Royal Society enquiry into livestock diseases that followed the disastrous 2001 Foot and Mouth epidemic, has warned in the wake of the Pirbright outbreak that however safe we make our germ labs we will not be able to keep FMD out for much longer.

This distinguished expert pinpoints globalisation as the vehicle that will sooner or later bring FMD to Britain from the Third World, where it is endemic.

The same is of course true for human, as well as animal, diseases. Globalisation allows millions of people to pour into our country every year, often from some very unhealthy places, which puts more than our livestock at risk. An African can be in a disease-ridden jungle one day and in Britain the next, squeezed cheek-by-jowl with commuters on a rush-hour tube train.

DANGER: Cheek-by-jowl on the tube.

Living on an island has kept us safe until now, but staying in the global economy puts all that at risk. Our nation, as Shakespeare put it, has always been "This fortress built by Nature for herself Against infection and the hand of war". Globalisation has already, by importing millions of Muslims as cheap labour, introduced the hand of war to our shores. Now it threatens to do the same for infection.

SALLY WOOD Straight talking!

The BBC's news machine

IT COMES as no surprise that an internal commission has accused the BBC of lack of impartiality. The report found that the Corporation failed to cover news events involving problems with immigrants because it didn't wish to upset our sensibilities or intrude into our comfort zone. I suppose that is one way of describing state censorship!

The recent murder of Ben Hitchcock in Beckenham when 40 blacks armed with chains and baseball bats took on 5 white lads is a prime example of BBC reporting. It was given scant coverage by the main BBC news although they did take time to point out that it was not being treated as a racist incident. An ITV News reporter took a different view: "It is hard to keep colour out of the equation when a gang of 40 blacks confronts a group of 5 whites."

Ben Hitchcock's short life met a violent end. He had his head stamped on and attempts were made to impale him on railings, before he was fatally knifed in the stomach. His last words were a cry for help, but today such a cry falls on deaf ears, for there is none in authority who cares about the fate of one of our young White lads.

I come from Penge, as Ben did. My brothers like him were Penge lads, but there the similarity ends. For my brothers grew up in a time just after the war when there was a great community spirit there. We lived in a road with 28 houses and we knew all our neighbours by name. If someone died, on the day of the funeral the road drew its curtains as a mark of respect. It was a time when the country was recovering from the after effects of the war and so it was a time of poverty and hardship. We could only afford coal for the one fire so in the winter we all huddled into the one room for warmth. We might not have had much but we played outside all the time for then at least our streets were safe.

Ben's murder has come and gone: the BBC news machine moves quickly on. It would not do for it to dwell too long on something that might upset our sensibilities or intrude into our comfort zone.

PENGE: Great community spirit after the war. Insert: Ben Hitchcock.

At the back of the queue

FIRST there was the newsreader Matthew Amroliwala, who passed us over to the reporter at the scene, an Asian, and then at last we saw them, emerging from their flooded homes - the indigenous folk of these islands.

As they invited the camera crews to wade knee deep around their kitchens there could be little doubt they were the victims of this Government's crisis management. Labour has poured £millions into inner city schemes to prevent immigrant communities from rioting, but when it comes to the law abiding British people, they only see the cash after a crisis has occurred.

Later in the week TV reports showed a car park where the English were, with their usual stoicism, forming an orderly queue. They were waiting for the two packs of water that they were being allocated that day.

When supplies arrived, suddenly there was mayhem. A large Black woman with her trolley loaded could be seen pushing people out of the way and an Asian man with far more than his allocation frantically loading the water into the back of a van as though there was no tomorrow.

A friend told me that when she worked in London she discovered with dismay one May Day that protests had closed the underground. Seeing the taxi queue stretching interminably into the distance she realised that her only recourse was to wait for a bus. However as soon as it arrived a number of Black passengers surged to the front and clambered aboard leaving their White counterparts standing on the pavement.

Can you imagine what would happen if South London were to be flooded and left without water - the rival gangs would be shooting it out for supplies and any White folk showing disrespect about this situation would be summarily dealt with.

How could it come to this? The British people ignored and left at the back of the queue in their own country.

IGNORED: Britons only see Government help after the crisis.

For the Avoidance of any Doubt

by Nick Griffin

Why do we call it 'Our Land'?
See that ancient oak tree?
My twelve great grandfathers let it stand,
No thicker than his thumb.

Why do we call it 'Our Land'?
See that grey racing tide?
It washes the bones of men who looked Like me and mine, not you.

Why do we call it 'Our Land'?
See that disused pithead?
Crushed down below lie children of
My family line, not yours.

Why do we call it 'Our Land'?
See that mighty city?
Every brick laid by men like our sons,
And their women wept.

Why do we call it 'Our Land'?
See that stone list of names?
The sons of this land who never came back -
Your family's not there.

We might let you stay in this land,
But never forget that it's ours -
And don't ever dare to say otherwise.

£408,000 to make Yorkshire folk feel guilty

A GRANT of £408,000 has been awarded to the Leeds West Indian Centre Charitable Trust to run a year-long programme of activities marking the involvement of Britain in the slave trade.

Black writers and artists will work on a book for Yorkshire's literary festivals and libraries celebrating black culture and Yorkshire's heritage of talented artists who have descended from the slave trade.

REMINDER: Just in case anyone in Yorkshire could ever forget ...

It is all funded by the Arts Council England (Yorkshire) and supported by the Heritage Lottery Fund, and the local authorities of Leeds, Kirklees and Bradford, as well as Sheffield Futures.

Project manager Kadija George, said: "We are really excited about what the writers and artists will produce, which will be archived for Yorkshire's history." Also to mark the 200th anniversary of the abolition of the slave trade is a new production of Carnival Messiah to be performed at Harewood House in the city.

TWELVE Scouts from the Third World visiting Britain for the World Scout Jamboree in Essex took the opportunity to vanish without trace into Britain's vast illegal immigrant population.

Nine Scouts from Bangladesh and Uganda vanished between the airport and the 100th World Jamboree site near Chelmsford, while another four from Sri Lanka and Nigeria vanished during the 10-day Jamboree.

Essex police said there were no suspicious circumstances surrounding the disappearing Scouts. As a police spokesman put it:

"It might just be that they didn't intend to go back. We cannot rule out the fact that they might have come here to start a new life rather than the Jamboree".

Adelphi puts corporate football before veterans

by Louise Scott

A GROUP of war veterans have been told that they are not wanted at a Liverpool hotel because their reunion clashes with a football match in the city.

The Adelphi Hotel, part of the Britannia Hotels group, cancelled the booking made by the veterans from Scarborough for their Navy Day celebration because they needed the rooms for corporate businesses attending Liverpool's game against Derby County.

REMEMBERING: The veterans were meeting for Merchant Navy Day.

The hotel claimed that it was "not profitable" to host the veterans rather than the clients associated with Liverpool Football Club.

This would have been the last Merchant Navy Day for some of the veterans, as they are now too frail to travel. But now they will even miss this reunion as other city centre hotels are fully booked.

The men had served in wars including the Second World War, the Falklands and the Gulf. The accommodation had been booked in February, and a deposit paid. They had stayed at the Adelphi for most of the Merchant Navy days since they were introduced in 2000. What an insult to men who have bravely served their country - ditched by a hotel in favour of those associated with a football club.

Anglers say riverbank signs won't help

Swan killers know what they are doing

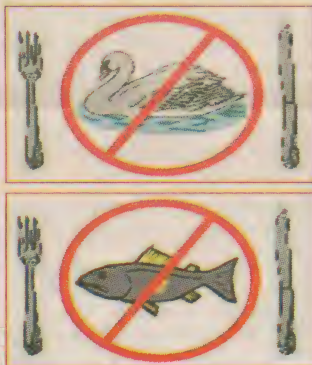

IMMIGRANTS from Eastern Europe are stealing swans, ducks and coarse fish from our rivers to save money on their food bills.

The Luton Angling Club is now so concerned with the situation that it has asked British Waterways to put up signs to try to deter the thieves.

Along a 12-mile stretch of the Grand Union Canal used by the club's anglers, nearly all the swans, ducks and carp are gone. So serious have the fish thefts become, the club no longer details on its website where the best catches have been made because immigrants are logging on and then turning up to plunder that section of the river.

The Environment Agency says it is aware of reports of immigrants found trying to stuff swans, ducks and fish into sacks by the river but acknowledge that nothing has been done about it.

But anglers are not convinced that the new signs will make a difference.

"The Environment Agency tries to excuse the problem by saying it's all about language difficulties and that's why the signs will help. That's nonsense. The thieves know exactly what they are doing.

"The authorities just won't confront the issue because it's immigrants that are involved and they are worried about accusations of racism," one said.

TARGETED: Swans are being killed by immigrants to save on food bills.

Why we must drink from this poisonous chalice

GORDON Brown would be crazy not to go for an autumn General Election despite presiding over the most unpopular Government since the last days of Margaret Thatcher.

If he cuts and runs for October 25th, the new Labour Party leader could well receive a mandate for another five years with an increased majority, such is the desperate state of the Conservative opposition. David Cameron has been a disaster for the Tories. Following his prolonged honeymoon period, he is now under the spotlight and is making even more gaffes than his predecessor Ian Duncan-Smith. The idea that the electorate will turn to a Conservative Party advocating the same policies as Labour but with a far less competent leadership, is a non-starter.

For the British National Party, any General Election before the 2009 European Elections would be unwelcome and one before the local elections next May, a disaster.

Contesting just 119 seats at the 2005 General Election, left the Party in a perilous financial state with few positives gained apart from the trouncing of UKIP. Parliamentary elections campaigns don't benefit the smaller parties because they haven't got the finance and don't receive the media coverage to enable them to compete with the three main parties on an equal footing.

That is why the BNP has a specific strategy of taking on and beating Labour, the Tories and Liberal Democrats in local council elections where the wearing out of shoe leather and the knocking on doors wins votes.

In the event of an autumn General Election, there is a temptation to save the Party huge sums of money and our activists a lot of hard work by simply stating that the BNP will only be contesting specifically targeted seats where significant support is evident.

But unfortunately that isn't an option.

The BNP is Britain's fourth political party. We have fought long and hard and against all the odds to rise to this status and it can only be maintained by ensuring that at every test of electoral support we maintain our position. Contesting just a handful of seats at a General Election won't do that because we will be leaving the way clear for UKIP and the Greens to attract votes where our candidates aren't standing.

This reason alone should be enough to encourage us to pull out all the stops at any General Election, but it's not the main one.

State funding for political parties is just around the corner, and the politicians and civil servants working out which criteria should be used for sharing out the pot are searching for any way possible to exclude the BNP.

After analysing the votes cast in 2005, they believe they are on to a winner by linking funding to the number of votes given to each political party at a General Election and introducing a minimum level to exclude those that don't reach this threshold.

This is why the British National Party must contest every seat possible at the General Election and maximise the BNP vote to ensure we reach the threshold to qualify for state funding.

So there isn't a choice. We must sip from this poisonous chalice and go against an electoral strategy that has brought us unprecedented success. Unfortunately it's a gamble that we must take.

Never immigration

I HAD just finished reading about the BBC's failure to blame immigration for the increase in house prices and the rising birth rate in this month's Freedom, when I switched on the BBC Six O'clock News.

The lead story was about the mass exodus of Britons from this country over the past 12 months to live overseas.

Many reasons were suggested for this trend including the weather, the crime rate, and the cost of living, but once again there was no mention of immigration. It is obvious to me, as it must be to most people, that the prime cause of Britons emigrating is the increasing numbers arriving on our shores.

The BBC might think it can exclude immigration from being a negative in political debate, but the reality of living in Britain today only exposes the Corporation's bias to a much wider audience.

Free swimming

IN Portsmouth, people from the ethnic minorities are being offered the chance of a year's swimming or badminton for only £10 thanks to the Government's Communities for Health programme.

The swimming activities include separate 'women only' sessions and 'learn to swim' courses. There are also male badminton sessions, health seminars and information days to encourage people from ethnic minorities to make positive health choices and lead active lives.

As I'm Portsmouth born and bred and 'hideously' White, I have to pay £2.60 each and every time to use the swimming pool. If I was black or Asian I could pay £10 for swimming for a year.

Surely such preferential treatment would even make the most avid Guardian reader feel uncomfortable.

John Bray, Fratton.

Victims not diverse

HOW strange that the National Lottery refused funding to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, which played such a vital role rescuing those stranded in the recent floods as well as those in peril on the sea, on the basis that it didn't serve a diverse enough community.

Does this denial of funding mean that the National Lottery believes that White communities should be left in their flooded homes and that funding the Turf and Respec School of Machete Sharpening is more important.

Also, how much more could the Government have spent on flood defences if it hadn't been blowing taxpayers' money on invading other people's countries?

LETTERS to the Editor

freedom@bnp.org.uk

Brazen and underhand

IN Issue 85 of Freedom there were reports on building a mosque in South Norwood, the increase in the Asian birthrate and the racial bias in our courts.

Such unfairness within our justice system is sinister, especially as the Secretary of State for Justice Lord Falconer, actually condones the bias and is suggesting that having more ethnic jurors gives a more fair and balanced outcome in verdicts for Black and Asian defendants.

This doesn't bode well for the hapless white victim of street crime who is likely to be at a disadvantage because of the colour of his skin.

The Labour Government has manipulated a seismic shift in the public perception of race and the benefits of multi-culturalism in order to change the culture and demography of our country for their own ends.

By allowing uncontrolled immigration from Asia, Africa and Eastern Europe and offering the promise of free accommodation and government handouts, the Labour Party is guaranteed millions of new votes, enough to keep it in power for years to come.

It is the most brazen, underhand and dishonest gerrymandering ever practised in Britain

R. J. Parton, Bristol.

Homes for migrants

THE Polish Government has warned that it is behind with building the facilities for the European Games which it is hosting next year.

Well, that shouldn't surprise anyone as the majority of Polish builders are over here, cashing in on the £billions being squandered on the 2012 London Olympics and Gordon Brown's huge house building programme.

Labour MP Alan Johnson recently stated that the future allocation of housing should not be the prerogative of British nationals but made on the basis of 'need'.

With 3 million new houses scheduled to be built over the next 20 years, it is now likely that the majority of these will not only be built by migrant workers but will also be allocated to migrant workers with their much larger families.

The British people need to wake up to what is going on and give the British National Party an electoral mandate to start putting the interests of the British people first.

David Martin, Beeford.

Immigrants in the dark

OUR local newspaper the Thurrock Gazette recently carried a homage to multi-culturalism.

Interviewee Tayo Yussef, who was born in Hackney and had just moved to Tilbury from Wood Green in London, was quoted as saying "man, there are a lot of white people here!"

The statement is revealing as it shows that immigrants who are born and brought up within ethnic minority communities in this country don't realize that Britain still has a White majority population.

The reason for this is that our television and newspapers ceaselessly promote Black and Asian people in their programmes, giving the impression that there are many more ethnic minorities in this country than there actually are.

M. White, Grays.

Strange priority

GORDON Brown's first act as Prime Minister to outlaw the term 'War on terror', appears to be playing down the threat posed by Islamic terrorists to this country.

Considering the huge Muslim population in the UK and the ease with which radical Imams slip in and out of the country, this would seem folly.

Such political announcements are designed to placate 'moderate' Muslims - those who claim not to support violence yet seem reluctant to criticise the terrorists. It's rather a strange priority for a new Prime Minister

John Quigleigh, London.

Multi-cultural London

THE BBC are currently in overdrive celebrating ethnic and diversity events and anniversaries.

Being heavily promoted is a special simultaneous debate on BBC Radio London and the BBC World Service, as to whether "London is the best role model for a multi-cultural city?"

Needless to say, the increase in black gun crime and the threat to the capital from home-grown Islamic terrorists hardly got a mention.

Rory Allanson, London.

I vow to thee my country

IHAVE just returned from my first Red White and Blue Festival and this truly family oriented occasion, presented a very different image of our Party to the one the media likes to portray.

I would like to suggest that at the finale, the singing of Jerusalem be replaced with I Vow To Thee My Country. I think this hymn would be more inclusive for our Scottish, Welsh and Irish cousins and would help correct the impression, justified or not, that the BNP is just interested in England.

5 UP, 2 DOWN and 1 OUT in latest Group and Branch evaluations

LAST month Group Support Officer Ian Dawson, and Group Development Officer Sadie Graham, completed the second full Group & Branch evaluations.

This process is conducted every six months and provides an opportunity for Groups to make the step up to Branch level. However, conversely, Branches that do not meet the criteria are demoted to Group level.

In the past, the evaluations have been done sporadically and without much standardisation, meaning a Group in one part of the country has been more successful across the board than a Branch in another area.

The conveying of Branch status is an acknowledgement from the Party that the unit is one of the elite units in the BNP due to its success in a wide range of areas. Now, if a unit is a Branch it has successfully met and maintained success, and can rightly be proud of its status as one of the best performing units in the BNP.

There are five main criteria for evaluation. These are:

- Number of members (over fifty to be a Branch)
- Numbers of candidates fielded in the last local elections (Four to be a Branch)
- Publication Sales (150 copies of Freedom and 15 copies of Identity to be a Branch, 50 copies of Freedom and 5 copies of Identity to be a Group – excludes Groups less than six months old)
- Be financially stable (Branch account balance of £300)
- Hold regular meetings (at least four a year for a Branch, two a year for a Group)

GROUP DEVELOPMENT
Sadie Graham

GROUP SUPPORT
Ian Dawson

Some units may order 500 copies of Freedom and 40 copies of Identity a month, though only ever stand one candidate or hold infrequent meetings. This would not be qualifying criteria because although they are good at one thing they are weak in other areas. It is important that Groups are well-rounded in order to become Branches, and the same for maintaining Branch status. That is why ALL the criteria - demanding but achievable - must be met.

This year's evaluations saw five Groups promoted to Branch status, while two Branches were demoted to Group status. One Group was closed down due to inactivity.

Five further Branches have two months to meet the remaining criteria; otherwise they will be demoted to Group status, while one Group has two months to maintain Group status.

This year's changes are as follows:

New Branches: Charnwood, Northants, Bristol & North Somerset, Sedgefield & Wear Valley, Barnsley. Branches demoted: Sunderland, Sheffield.

Groups closed down: Grimsby.

Congratulations to all those units who have made the step up from Group to Branch level. Hopefully those units that have not managed to maintain Branch status will rectify the situation in time for the next evaluations.

Sunderland, for example, stood another full slate of candidates, and also has a healthy bank balance, though they failed to meet two of the five criteria.

Sheffield had built up a considerable membership base, but sales of publications were insufficient and meetings held far too infrequently. However, there is enough potential in both Sunderland and Sheffield for the drop to Group status to be brief.

AUGUST 9TH: The hard-working team that made the RWB 2007 such a success. After 17 days on site, they take a break for a final photo.

THANK YOU

ALAN WARNER: The courageous farmer that made it all possible.

It was only because of the courage shown by Derbyshire farmer and British National Party local councillor Alan Warner, that the RWB 2007 Family Festival was able to take place. "Alan had a lot to put up with including the local newspaper and television working with Labour councillors to try to whip up public opinion to stop the event going ahead," RWB organiser David Shapcott, told Freedom. "On behalf of those who enjoyed our super weekend, I would like to thank Alan for his tenacity in standing up to the anti-BNP campaign targeted against him."

A TASTE OF WALES: A new batch of Welsh Cakes are hot off the bakestone.

Bara Brith and piping-hot cawl secure Welsh tent 3rd prize

It was the first year at the RWB that British National Party members from Wales had their own regional stall, but that didn't stop it winning third prize with the "varied representation of Wales" that it was able to present.

RWB campers were enticed into the Wales tent early Saturday morning by the smell of the cooking of hot Welsh Cakes straight off the bakestone (you can't get them fresher), just-made biscuits, homemade Bara Brith (fruit bread) and piping-hot Cawl (meat and vegetable broth).

For those who enjoy sampling traditional beers there was a selection of Welsh beers, fine traditional real ale with more flavour in a single sip than you will find in a whole barrel of the imported chemical pap served in many pubs today.

A selection of tourist information leaflets on Wales were on hand as well as a gallery of scenic prints taken from around Wales depicting famous castles, forests, rivers, beaches and waterfalls. There was also a display of photographs from the British National Party's campaign for the Welsh Assembly Elections and council elections.

Visitors to this marquee were given a short but concise history of the Rebecca Riots and got the chance to buy Welsh knitwear, Welsh cards and Welsh love spoons.

The stall very busy all weekend and helpers from Swansea to Prestatyn took a turn responding to enquiries from a steady stream of visitors.

The recipes for Bara Brith, Cawl, and Welsh Cakes were available on a leaflet but these were quickly snapped up on the Saturday morning. Those who missed out can get one from Swansea BNP at swansea@bnp.org.uk

OK FOR SOME: While their parents manned the Welsh stall, these youngsters were enjoying the RWB.

Eastern Region - Best stall

Broughting sausages, Bedfordshire Clangers & Bombardier

THERE was a record turn out of Eastern Region members at this year's Red White and Blue festival and many lent a hand working on the regional stall, which was managed by Emma Colgate.

On offer were local delicacies such as sausage sandwiches with hand made Broughting sausages from Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire Clangers (a traditional pie), Suffolk Red Poll beef sandwiches, local jams, Essex seafood and Norfolk Mustard. A real touch of summer was provided by Fenland strawberries and to help wash them all down were samples of Bedfordshire Bombardier ale.

Within the Eastern Region compound there were two further display tents - one featuring a mock up East Coast beach with Punch and Judy stand and the sounds of seagulls overhead and waves crashing on the shore, and a recreated East Anglian farmyard. The other tent housed displays on the region's local councillors, all election results, a range of locally produced

"There was also an East Coast beach & East Anglian farm for the children to play in" leaflets, as well as special exhibitions on County Regiments, Royal Naval connections, local heroes, local produce and an eye-catching reproduction of the Anglo-Saxon poem 'The Battle of Maldon'. For the children there was a tuck shop and traditional seaside strong man/fat lady photo cut-outs where guests could have their pictures taken - and all this took place to a background of selected Suffolk folk music.

A tremendous amount of work went into planning the stall so it was fitting that it won 'Best of Show' prize.

There was another prize at the RWB for the Eastern Region. Clive Godfrey, Organiser for Maldon and Braintree Group, picked up the prize for the best local election result of the year on behalf of Jean Gossage. She had polled an amazing 75% of the vote in May when she topped the poll for Southminster Parish Council.

Leeds are new RWB football champions

THE weather forecast for the Sunday morning of the Red, White & Blue Family Festival was cool and overcast with the possibility of showers.

Now that would have been ideal for the annual RWB six-a-side football tournament organised by Mike Bell of South Birmingham BNP, but the forecast was completely wrong.

There wasn't a cloud in the sky as the competition got underway and it wasn't long before temperatures were soaring into the eighties which made life difficult for the crowd pleasers from Liverpool with their joke curly perm wigs and their goalie in an inflatable sumo wrestler outfit.

"The standard was much higher than in previous years and both semi-finals were keenly contested affairs," Mike Bell told Freedom.

"It was a great success and will surely be even more competitive next year. I would like to congratulate Leeds on winning the cup, Paul Armstrong (junior) for being top scorer with six goals and the young referee who officiated the games with such a firm but fair hand.

"Nick Griffin made the presentation, handing out seven different trophies in total for a competition that has now secured its place on the Sunday morning of the RWB alongside the traditional church service."

Full marks to Mike Bell for ensuring that the event was so very well organised.

Rain fails to dampen spirits at Cromwell Club shoot

AT the end of July members from Leicestershire and Charnwood attended the Cromwell Diners' Club Family Summer Shoot and Barbecue.

The turn out was hit by the dreadful summer weather we have been experiencing but despite continuous heavy rain all afternoon, those who did attend really enjoyed themselves amongst friends.

As well as the barbecue, clay pigeon shoot and a 'casino' for the adults, there were games, a bouncy castle and competitions for the children.

Huddersfield clean-up team clears pathway

ROBERT Walker, the organiser of the British National Party in Huddersfield, assembled a clean-up team on a sunny Sunday afternoon in July to clear a popular local pathway in Golcar ward that had become overgrown and inaccessible.

Robert, who polled 1170 votes in Golcar in the May elections (coming second to the Liberal Democrats with 22% of the vote) had asked Kirklees Council to attend to the blocked pathway but his request was ignored.

The path, which is next to one of the busiest roads in Yorkshire, was worked on for over three hours by half a dozen British National Party activists who filled a trailer full of rubbish and overgrown vegetation.

"Our efforts were seen by thousands of motorists and the local people who walked past expressed their support for what we were doing," Huddersfield secretary Jonathan Wright, told Freedom.

"This is just the first of many projects that we have in the pipeline and the Branch will be spending the summer trying to improve the appearance of the unsightly spots of Huddersfield that the general public has drawn our attention to."

A LIGHT AT THE END OF THE TUNNEL: An afternoon's work by BNP activists on an overgrown path in Golcar starts to pay dividends.

Freedom sales top 100 in Debden

LAST month saw a weekend of action by the Epping Forest British National Party Branch.

On the Saturday, twenty local activists led by organiser Danny Warville, set up a stall on Debden Broadway and 100 copies of Freedom were sold in just three hours.

Leaflets and the local BNP newsletter the Debden Patriot, were given out to shoppers and British National Party councillors were on hand at another stall to meet with members of the public and discuss any issues that they wanted to raise.

On the Sunday, a meeting attracted an audience of ninety people who heard speeches from the Epping councillors and Redbridge BNP councillor Julian Leppert, as well as local chairman Frank Forte, and the British National Party's elections officer, Eddy Butler. A collection of £470 was taken at the meeting, boosting branch funds.

EPPIING: Local district BNP councillor Sue Clapp, addresses the meeting.

Crime & Antisocial Behaviour Are Out Of Control

Robberies are up, muggings and sexual assaults are up, burglary is up. A wave of anti-social behaviour is sweeping our streets and estates, with a minority of rowdy youths making life unpleasant for the law abiding majority. But where are all the police? Set behind desks learning how to be politically correct!

When the police aren't sat in offices they're far too busy chasing drivers to collect a range of different fines and penalties to help fund the out of touch council. It seems that New Labour view the motorist as the only real threat to public safety!

But while the police are sat at the side of the motorway or in political correctness classes the real criminals are free to wreck decent people's lives!

The British National Party would put police back on the streets where they belong. Police would not be have their hands tied by politically correct hand cuffs and would be able to deal with criminals without fear of losing their jobs.

But Where Are All The Police?

The Cost of Europe

"Britain's membership of the EU costs the taxpayer £8.5 billion every year"

But the costs of membership are not just monetary...

Jobs Thanks to the European Union, Britain's businesses are weighed down with bureaucracy and red-tape, destroying thousands of jobs.

Sovereignty The EU is taking power away from Westminster and placing it in the hands of unelected bureaucrats.

Currency Every member nation will be forced to join the Euro, that means no more pounds, and no more control over our economy.

Fair Trials The British legal system rests on the rule of law, not on the rule of the EU. In Europe it's the other way round.

The NHS In Crisis

A £512 Million Deficit

Health Secretary Patricia Hewitt was forced to admit that the NHS deficit has reached £512 million - more than double the £200 million target.

15,000 NHS Jobs Face The Axe

In a desperate bid to cut costs in the face of the huge £512 million deficit, over 15,000 NHS jobs are to be saved. This means more understaffed hospitals.

1,000 NHS Beds To Go

More Labour cuts are on the way to reduce costs. A further 1,000 beds are to go this year alone.

FACT: There are more managers in the NHS than there are beds for patients.

FACT: The British National Party is the only party willing to cut costs by cutting bureaucracy and put patients first.

BNP centre of attention at Glamorgan Show

FOR the second year running the British National Party had a stall alongside Labour and the Tories at the prestigious Vale of Glamorgan Show at Fônmon Castle. But this year the weather took its toll with heavy rain for 24 hours before the event which left stallholders ankle deep in mud. There was a break in the weather enabling the tent to be put up but then it rained for the rest of the morning. Some displays just didn't turn up and others left when seeing the conditions. But those who persevered were rewarded after lunch when the sun broke through and the visitors started to arrive in numbers. Like last year, the BNP stall was the centre of attention. Media bias has left some people with an odd idea about what the Party is all about but thankfully the six BNP representatives were on hand to set the record straight, giving out over four hundred back issues of Freedom to visitors to the tent.

York BNP hears about the reality of living in Southern Africa

by Louise Scott

IT WAS standing room only at the latest British National Party meeting in York to hear BNP Group Support Officer Ian Dawson give an appraisal of the Party's electoral performance across North Yorkshire in the May council elections.

In some wards the BNP polled more than the main parties, and this despite a quite vicious anti-BNP campaign run by the local newspaper.

Amongst the guest speakers was Michelle Shrubbs, who stood as a local election candidate in Harrogate in May. Michelle was born in Rhodesia although her family originated in Yorkshire. During her time in Southern Africa she saw crime levels increase.

"Houses have to be surrounded by barbed wire and electric fences, and be connected to 24 hour armed response units. Security gates inside homes are now essential, as are guns in the bedroom for personal protection," she told the audience.

Michelle and her family decided to return to the UK, only to see the Government here opening the immigration floodgates. She said the problems of South Africa were heading for the UK, and that joining the BNP was the best thing she had ever done. BNP Website Editor Steve Blake, also spoke at the meeting attacking the BBC for misleading viewers, foreign aid and the millions of pounds sent to Pakistan when it should be spent on the victims of the flooding in our own country.

He also slammed Government claims that Britain's market garden crops would rot in the fields if there were no migrant workers to pick them.

"This is nonsense," he said.

"Down the generations, the harvests have been gathered in by local people and others travelling out from the cities for a couple of weeks in the countryside to work for farmers, picking their produce."

MICHELLE SHRUBBS: Very pleased to have joined the British National Party.

New BNP group in Melton Mowbray looking to displace the Tories

AFTER more than doubling its membership in the last year, the British National Party in the historic Leicestershire market town of Melton Mowbray, along with Rutland, has broken off from the Leicestershire BNP Branch to form its own group.

Under the experienced eye of BNP veteran and new fundholder Keith Addison, newly appointed parish councillor James North, will be taking on the challenging position of organiser.

When asked what he thought of the move, James said: "I am happy Melton and Rutland is going it alone, as it enables activities and policies to become even more local and that should help us attract grass-roots support from the community".

As well as holding a weekly social event in the heart of Melton Mowbray, the group has made its first foray into local politics with Nick Porter standing in the May elections and coming second, beating both Conservative candidates in the process. Election

NICK PORTER: Beat the Tories

agent Mark Wain, was delighted with this outcome:

"It was a great result. Especially as one of the Conservative candidates approached us at the polling station, thanking us for standing as we had 'handed him the seat'. Yet more evidence of how out of touch the Tories are, even at a local level."

And talking of Tories, Allan Dean the very man who was so arrogant and obnoxious in his behaviour towards BNP members at the polling station has been 'released' from his post as Tory agent because the local association is short of funds.

It is ironic that this redundancy was announced in the very week Melton Mowbray and Rutland members formed the new British National Party group - possibly a sign of things to come.
